A funnel about ten has given his name and proved his right to vote he approaches the line of boxes. An election officer attends him from box to box, at each one giving him a small metal ball. The voter holds this up between the thumb and foreitnger to show that he has only a single ball, and, thrusting his arm in the funnel, drops his ball to the right or left, according as he votes for or against the didate, the movement of his hand being unseen. At the close of the polls | as follows: the votes cast for a candidate are subtracted from those against him, and his total is thus ascertained. In Hungary, until a few years ago, the electors voted with sticks, colored to represent the parliament is nominated and voted for of every variety. Many-colored birds may interest Americans who fol-lowed the announcement of the English election results a few weeks ago with almost as much eagerness as the British themselves.

A candidate for parliament is nominated in writing. The signers must be a proposer, a seconder and eight other registered electors of that county or borough. This is handed to the returning officer and if at the time of the election one hour passes and only as many candidates stand nominated as there are vacancies be at once declares them elected. In case of a contest each voter is given a "ballot paper," giving names and description of the candidates like this:

MORLEY. (John Mories, of 52 Piccachity, London, journal-

Each ballot has a number printed on its back and on its face a counterfoll containing the same number. At the time of voting the ballot paper must be marked officially. It is then delivered to the voter within the polling station and the registered number of the elector is marked on the counterfoil. It is then taken into a closed compartment, marked and folded and placed into the ballot box, the official seal uppermost The returning officer at the close of the polls counts the ballots in the presence of the candidates or their agents and at once declares the candidate or candidates receiving the largest number of votes elected. The returning officer casts a vote only in case of a tie. He fixes the day of election in case of a county or district borough not later than nine days after the receipt of the writ, and for other boroughs than that of the district, not later than four days after receiving the writ. The election hours are two and must be some time between ten a. m. and three p. m.

Incidentally, it might be well to call the attention of the American voters to the case with which a vote can be invalidated. The courts have decided that the following markings on a ballot are illegal and make the ballot void: A cross in the upper left hand corner outside the space for names; a cross at the left and below; cross at both the right and left; cross on the back of a ballot, opposite the name of the candidate; two crosses; cross with letter above or below; cross with additional marks of any kind; cross with the candidate's name in addition; cross with another name written in; cross and voter's signature on any part of ballot; cross in form of ormate script; cross with small .lines running in several directions; ciroles or ovals; spiral designs; star or naturally lines not forming a cross; single line instead of cross; blot or seratch in ink below candidate's name; straight line on the back.

So the voter has numerous pitfalls to swild. Let him make his mark in the shape of a pinin cross and his rote will

Mr. Holmes describes himself to the reporter as "a mossback farmer, 10 years of age." This shows the straightforward character of the gentleman, and his interview was characteristic throughout.

"I have had estarth," said he, "for forty-seven years. I suffered aroutes in this time. My hose was stepped up, first on one side and them on the other. There was a constant dropping of matter into my throat and I was hawking and spirting all the lime. I had violent coughing spells, raising a thick mucus. My howels were costive, I had rheumatism in the left leg. Whenever I would walk fast I would have a wheeling sensul in in my throat and chest, and fell as I i were choking.

"Since I began treatment at the Copeland Medical Institute I have been lumensely relieved. The medicines I took brought out all the corruption and I discharged from the nose lumps as large as a plecourseg and strings of stuff an inch and a half ionr.
